"That's enough," said Jack, calmly, taking his hat, "We will not discuss this matter any further, Adele." Jack Ashton passed out very haugh-

It was the afternoon of the third day. He had been to the park in the morning, and had walked back. There was a strange dizziness in his head, and his knees knocked together more than once, and twice his eyesight seemed to be leaving him. He was hungry; he had not eaten for nearly three days, but he thought he was dying.

It gave him a certain sort of grim satisfaction. He would not have taken his own life, but if death would come without his direct aid- And then he looked at his reflection in a plate glass window and shuddered. It would never do to die in such looks. "A pleasant day," said Jack, drearily, as the barber lathered him deftly. "Exceedingly pleasant," said the barber. "The weather is one of the few things we can enjoy without smile.

The idea struck Jack as original, and he smiled for the first time in three days. "In this world." pursued the bar-effort to rise. "Then you don't love me!" "Pardon me-I have use for you," "Now, Jack, the barbar said; "you are necessary for my entrance to Nirvana. I had a fancy," pursued the barber, running his thumb along the edge of the razor and smiling, "to shave a certain number and leave tolt the determination ness and mamma's positive hatred?" of the sacrifice to Buddah. By inspiration I hit upon a perfectly just and "Haven't I stood by you in spite of equitable plan. "It is very strange," muttered the barber, as he laid down the razor and opened a drawer in search of a blank piece of paper. The cloth that the parber had tucked under his chin was of cotton, but it answered Jack's purpose. With a bound he was out of the chair and had flung the cloth over the barber's head. Then, with all the strength of fear, horror and rage, he struck with his fist the muffled figure and it fell against the cup rack with a great crash. His knees gave way as plight. His clothes were dusty, his boots grimy and scuffed, and he had he dashed across the street, but his voice had strength to cry, "Help! Murder!" before he fell upon the

"The thousandth shave!" cried the barber as he sprang at him with an open razor. The policeman had just time to strike up the arm with one blow and the next he brought down with killing force on the maniac's head. "Adele!" "Jack! Oh, I knew you'd come back! And, oh, Jack, I don't know why, but I think papa is more inclined to like you, and I heard mother say that-" "No matter now, Adele. Tell me you forgive me?" "Forgive you, Jack? Why what makes you look so pale? Have you been ill?" "I've been nearly dead," said Jack. And then he told her all.

Fruit and Nuts.

Both fruit and nuts are the natural food of man. Fresh and the grains or cereals were an afterthought when man began to lose the sweet simplicity of nature and civilize himself. Cereals contain a vast amount of starch, argue the fruitarians. Starch in excess is not good for man. The starch particles do not digest, do not assimilate. They clog up the system, and when they do this the man thinks he is getting fat. In proportion as he gets fat he begins to be subject to heaviness, stiffness, pain and allment.

Cockronches With Six-Inch Wings. When the transportation company's barges brought ties for the trolley in Hartford they also brought some Southern cockroaches that dwarf the local specimens. The ties came from North Carolina and Georgia, where these giant cockroaches are abundant.
